THE REGION OF SICILY (SICILIA)

Sicily is the largest island in the Mediterranean and has more wine vineyards for its size than any other region. In recent years, production has reached incredible levels, often outputting the greatest volume of wine in the area. For example, Trapani, which is Sicily's westernmost province, produces more wine than Tuscany or Piedmont. On an international scale it produces more wine than Hungary, Austria or Chile.

Marsala is Sicily's best loved wine. Created by English merchant traders nearly two centuries ago, it has recently enjoyed a comeback with connoisseurs. The dry Marsala Vergine and Superiore Riserva have warmly complex flavours that rank among the finest fortified wines of Europe. With 22 million litres produced a year, Marsala ranks among Italy's top ten DOCs by volume.

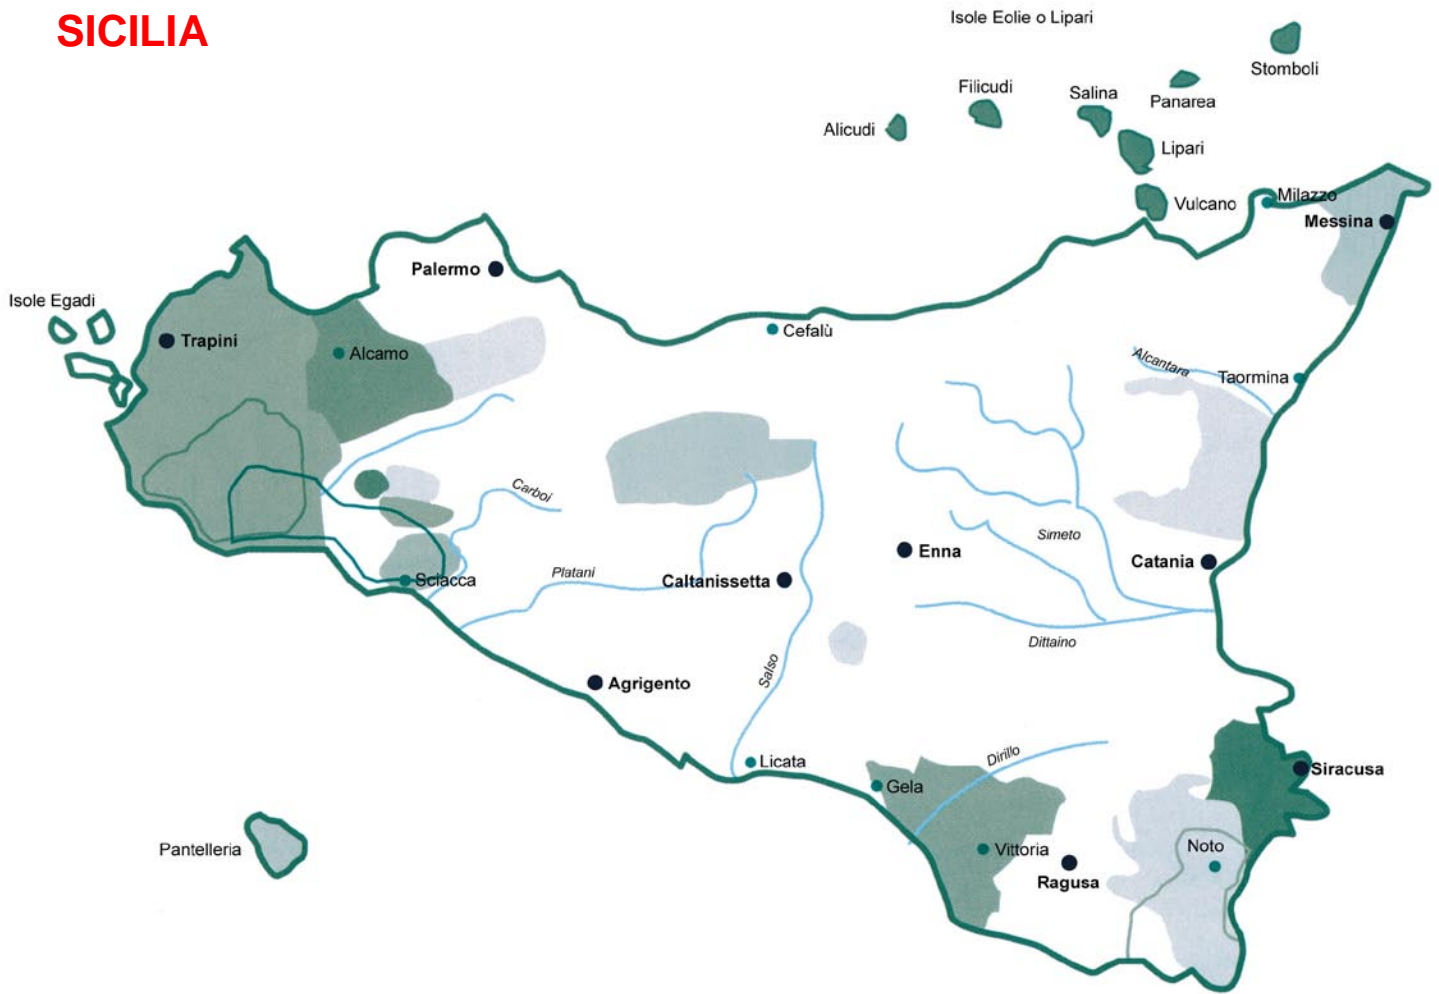

Other wines from Sicily include the white, bone-dry Bianco d'Alcamo; after Marsala, it is the DOC wine most significant in quantity. Moscato di Pantelleria is among the richest and most esteemed of Italian sweet wines. The dry white and red wines of Etna, whose vines drape over the lower slopes of the volcano, show notable class

A number of IGT and vini da tavola are thriving. Native grapes such as Inzolia, Catarratto, Grecanico, Nero d'Avola, Nerello Mascalese and Pignanello make delicately fruity wines and are increasingly prominent. Outsiders such as Sauvignon, Chardonnay and Shiraz have also proved promising.

The region's wine production offers premium quality. New methods of viticulture in the sunny, temperate hills are helping establish wines of real character and individuality. Sicily is rising to the winemaking challenge and is increasingly determined to live up to the promise that was so well known to the Ancient Greeks.
